The claims "Fewer files" and "Greater speed", quoted below, are not accurate. I think that the "Greater speed" statement is a little misleading, because the 'speed' you get using C1 depends on the amount of RAM you have, and that depends on your RAM allocation. For a machine with 4 GB of RAM it will work OK, and for a machine with 8 GB of RAM it will be fantastck, but for much more RAM it fails miserably. Secondly, it clearly depends on your machine. I think "the speed you get" is abstract and therefore a poor measure of whether it's great or good. Easily the biggest change between 5 and CC is the overwhelming availability of new features, although some are more easily accessible than others. To try this out for yourself, I suggest downloading a trial version and trying it out. At $899 (4GB), it'll last you a while. Lightroom 5 is a vast upgrade. At times it seemed we were tracking down every new release in the PS product line, but since its launch, every new version has just hit the market. As I tried this out for the first time with the 5.1 CR2 release, there are more new features than I was anticipating, and many have been requested by the community. It also enables users to view more user-friendly large-format copies, as well as the ability to automatically resize automatically ratio-corrected images. Most importantly, the Color Balance capability in the layers panel allows for the specific adjustment of Red, Green, and Blue values, which can be used to adjust the entire image, eliminating the need to make each adjustment manually. It's quick and easy to make video look more professional, and it's good news for those who've had their videos resized in the past.
